Optimizing the use of resources, such as time, money, and materials, is a key aspect of project management. This involves identifying areas where resources can be used more efficiently and finding ways to reduce waste. For example, a project manager might identify that a certain task is taking too long and find a way to streamline the process. Another example might be identifying that a certain material is being used in excess and finding a way to reduce the amount used. By optimizing resource use, project managers can ensure that their projects are completed on time and within budget.
